Art: In the BFA, the Asian or Latin American art history course is no longer restricted to a list of five courses. Majors now must have one course in Asian or Latin American art history, but the choices are not specified. This change was approved by the art history section of the department. In the spring of 2010, a senior exhibition was approved by the AAC and general faculty as a requirement for the BFA capstone, and the requirement was in the catalog copy submitted by the department, but was left out of the catalog. It was added as an editorial change. Clarifications were added to the minor to state that in the five courses required, two have to be in the same medium. The two-credit labs, which are currently co-requisites for the studio seminars in the three focus mediums, are eliminated in the catalog (ART69-232, 69-332, 69-342). Instead, the 4 credit seminars will be taken for 4 to 6 credits, with BFA students taking the course for the second time enrolling for 6 credits. This is a change in the placement of the 2 credits in the catalog, not a change in the program nor in the requirements for the seminar classes. Course sequence changes: Digital Arts: Computer Animation will be offered every fall rather spring; Digital Photography will be offered every spring; the Design I and Design II rotation is changed from two courses in design every year (Design I in fall, Design II in spring) to one: Design I in fall, odd years and Design II in even years.
