

CENTER FOR CAREER & PROFESSIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Major Possibilities: International Studies

Quick Facts

- Students with International Studies majors have the advantage of being able to understand cultural diversity and evaluate information from a global perspective.
- The major offers hard-working students the chance to become fluent in a foreign language.
- Because students focus on more than one area of study, they are well-suited to a variety of jobs. To explore those options, internships help shape professional identities, develop 21st century career-readiness skills, and make meaning of the academic experience.
- International Studies can lead to further education, such as law school or graduate school. Some occupations within the fields of social science and art history require a PhD.
- Studying abroad for one semester is a requirement of the major, so consider that when you are planning your courses.

International Studies Major Synopsis

International Studies is a three-part major that allows students to choose a disciplinary major, a geographical area of emphasis, and a language that corresponds to the chosen geographic area. Students may petition to study disciplines and areas besides those listed below.

Major: Art History, History, or Political Science (For students with a Latin American concentration, Anthropology may also be selected)

Geographical Area of Emphasis: East Asia, Europe, or Latin America

Language: Chinese, French, German, or Spanish (if not already majoring/minoring in relevant language)

Study Abroad: Directly related to the students' geographic area of emphasis

Sample Occupational Areas

POLITICAL SCIENCE

Political scientists study the origins of political systems and public policy. They may conduct polls and analyze information and ideology. To become a political scientist, advanced education is necessary. However, a myriad of careers are available to political science majors, including legal professions, journalism, employment with federal or state government, business management, or any other occupation you may desire. Many students focusing on political science move on to become lawyers. Lawyers may specialize in a number of areas, such as bankruptcy, probate, international, or environmental law. Most lawyers are in private practice, concentrating on criminal or civil law.

ART HISTORY

A degree in Art History can lead to many unique and exciting careers, such as curator at a museum or university library or arts writer for a magazine or local arts council. The employment outlook for graduates is competitive, but jobs are available in art publishing, art journalism, libraries, public art councils, art galleries, and with companies specializing in furniture and architectural restoration. There are some entry-level jobs in museum work, but most jobs in this field require advanced degrees. Because the field of art history increasingly considers art in the larger political and social context of its culture, choosing the interdisciplinary Art History major as part of your International Studies major will make your education all the more rewarding and applicable in your future career.

HISTORY

Historians research, analyze, and interpret the past. They usually specialize in a country or region, a particular period, or a particular field, such as social, intellectual, cultural, political, or diplomatic history. They can do work in unusual settings, preserving historical sites or artifacts. History majors also have multiple other occupations open to them: teaching, researching, information management, consulting, filmmaking, writing, archiving, advocating for the underprivileged, civil or foreign service, and being a lawyer, among others.

ANTHROPOLOGY

Anthropologists study the origin and the physical, social, and cultural development and behavior of humans. Anthropologists are able to find jobs almost anywhere. There are four fields in which an anthropologist can focus: social/cultural anthropology, linguistic anthropology, biological anthropology, and archaeology. Applied anthropology is an up-and-coming subfield of anthropology; professionals in this field often work for non-academic clients (e.g. governments, NGOs, educational agencies, businesses) applying the theories and methods of anthropology to the analysis of practical problems.
