Major Possibilities: Modern Languages

Chinese, French, German, & Spanish

Quick Facts

- Careers related exclusively to language proficiency are limited and usually filled by native speakers. But combining language proficiency with other skill sets enhances opportunities in government, business, medicine and health care, law enforcement, teaching, technology, the military, communications, industry, social service, and marketing.
- A person fluent in more than one language can have an advantage over peers in the workforce. When applying for a job, your potential employer will know that you can help them expand their clientele.
- Professionals with language proficiency often travel and communicate with international colleagues more throughout their careers.
- If you have not grown up learning more than one language, becoming fluent in another language takes dedication and hard work, but it is definitely possible. Potential employers will recognize your effort. And since you learn how to learn languages, learning the next language is easier.
- Internships can help shape professional identities, develop 21st century career-readiness skills, and make meaning of the academic experience.

Modern Language Major Synopsis

Majors are offered in French, German, and Spanish, and minors in French, German, Spanish, and Chinese. Majors are expected to acquire a strong grasp of language and a working knowledge of literature, culture, and film. The capstone experience, an integrative project in which students undertake significant writing and research in the target language, provides a solid grounding that prepares students as much for graduate work as for sophisticated original projects in many fields. Students often pair their major or minor with expertise in another discipline. For information on the language placement exam, consult the course catalog.

CHINESE

The Chinese language is the most widely spoken language in the world, with more than 1.3 billion speakers - that's 1/6 of the world's population. There are many job opportunities for a graduate fluent in Chinese because China is one of the fastest growing markets in the world economy and, correspondingly, political relationships with China are increasingly important.

FRENCH

French is used as an official language in 29 countries, including Belgium, Canada, Haiti, Madagascar, and Switzerland. French is spoken in both North and South America, North Africa and sub-Saharan Africa, the Caribbean, the South Pacific, and, of course, Europe. It is a Romance language, meaning that it was derived from Latin. While about 220 million people speak French today, a French demographic project estimates that approximately 700 million people will speak French by 2050.

GERMAN

German is one of the Germanic languages, related to Danish, Norwegian and Swedish, Dutch, as well as to English. It is used as the official language of Germany, Austria, Switzerland, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, and parts of Italy and Belgium. German is the most widely spoken native language in the European Union.

SPANISH

Spanish, another Romance language, is of great importance to the United States because of neighboring Mexico. If you are interested employment stateside, fluency in Spanish will greatly enhance your ability to find a job. Spanish is also spoken as the official language in Spain, most of South and Central America, and parts of the Caribbean. It is the second most prevalent first language in the world (after Mandarin Chinese).

Language Learning Tips

- Through study abroad or other means, visit a country whose people speak the language you are learning, and learn the culture and customs of that country.
- The most valuable language-learning experience is immersion.
- Read foreign newspapers and magazines to keep up with world events.
- Listen to popular music in the language you are learning.
- Most language students cannot speak as well as they can read and write. Practice speaking aloud. Take oral presentations seriously.
